EDUCATION IN ENGLAND DURING WAR TIME

We, in Canada, may be wondering whether the present European war is interfering with the educational system in Britain.

Here are extracts from a letter written by a London teacher.

"The evacuation of teachers and of school children from schools in the danger zones has cost England millions of pounds. In many cases it has not been entirely successful as the greater number of the children have returned to their homes.

Evacuation was optional so that, roughly, only about fifty per cent of the children went away and the rest remained in London without school or discipline of any kind.

This is how our schooling is carried on in the reception areas. varies according to conditions For example, here at Seaford, Sussex, a kind lady offered us a large house which makes seven fairly decent class rooms. In other cases double shifts are worked with the local schools. Last week two of the staff were recalled to London to teach the children who have returned home. They are not allowed to have more than fifty pupils in school at one time as the basement has been converted into an air-raid shelter and it will only hold that number They teach in two shifts, one in the mornings, the other in the afternoons. Families must not be separated, so each teacher has all grades. The school windows all grades. The school windows are all sand-bagged so the electric lights are going all day. Some of the classrooms are used as accommodation for firemen. Two of the rooms have been fitted up as bed rooms, one as a kitchen, another as recreation room. These men are on hand so as to prevent the spread of fire in case of air-raids.

On the whole, the educational system has been sadly interrupted and it will be long before it becomes normal even if war collapses

These cannot be restricted, said Mr. Taggart, because any inter-ference might imperil Canada's trade treaty with the United

Mr Taggart also declared that Canadian representatives cannot compel Great Britain to pay what ever prices Canadians think they would like to receive for their bacon and hogs,

Kindness During Life

I would rather have one little rose From the garden of a friend, Than to have the choicest flowers When my stay on earth must end.

I would rather have one plea In kindness, said to me, han flattery when my heart is cold And life has ceased to be.

I would rather have a loving smile From friends I know are true Than tears shed 'round my casket When this world I've bid adieu.
